Kitchen Cleaning

Our kitchen cleans provide the highest standards of hygiene to be maintained. All surfaces coming into contact with food must be disinfected.

Your daily cleaning schedule will take care of the routine cleaning of dishes and kitchenware (crockery, cutlery, glass, food preparation equipment and utensils), walls, floors and kitchen furniture.

However, no matter how effective the daily cleaning, there will be a progressive accumulation of soil, particularly grease, on less accessible surfaces, notably canopies, ducts, light fittings, floors and walls behind equipment, ceilings and upper half of walls. The removal of this accumulated soiling requires deep cleaning undertaken at regular intervals throughout the year – depending on your particular level of use.

Kitchen Deep Cleaning

Our specialist deep clean team can arrive at a time best suited to you to thoroughly deep clean your kitchen and bring it up to a standard that you will be proud of and which will comply with current legislation and inspections.

Computer/Telephone Cleaning

Is your office an incubator for bacteria?

Office workers are exposed to more germs from their phones and keyboards than toilet seats, scientists reveal. Work stations contain nearly 400 times as many microbes than lavatories.

Office equipment should be regularly disinfected to prevent the spread of viruses and bacteria responsible for disease. The reality of our grubby working environments is exposed in a study by the University of Arizona. A desk is capable of supporting 10 million microbes and the average office contains 20,961 microbes per square inch, according to research.

The key offenders are telephones, which harbour up to 25,127 microbes per square inch, keyboards 3,295 and computer mice 1,676. By contrast, the average toilet seat contains 49 microbes per square inch, the survey showed.

Microbiologist Dr Charles Gerba, of the University of Arizona, who carried out the research, said: "When someone is infected with a cold or flu bug the surfaces they touch during the day become germ transfer points because some cold and flu viruses can survive on surfaces for up to 72 hours."

Window Cleaning

Safe for your business and the environment

We have a full window cleaning service up to 4 storeys which incorporates a pure water wash and reach system plus standard blade system.

When you choose Assured Cleaning Services you can be sure that windows, cladding, frames and signs will be quickly and safely cleaned.

The Omnipole system we use converts tap water into pure water by way of a state of art reverse osmosis system. This purified water is then pumped up a specially designed pole (up to 20 metres / seven floors high).

All this takes place with the contractor's feet safely on the ground alleviating you from Health and Safety concerns. This eliminates the need for cradles, cherry pickers and eyebolts reducing your cost employing such equipment. You will also be sure your organisation is complying with the strict legislation regarding ladder usage.
